College of Humanities and Social Sciences

For more information about this college, including contact information, visit the college (http://www.chass.ncsu.edu) website.

Box 8101
Raleigh, NC 27695-8101

The College of Humanities and Social Sciences offers programs of study that lead to baccalaureate and advanced degrees in the disciplines of the humanities and social sciences. The college also offers courses in these disciplines that are required in all undergraduate programs. In this way the university provides its students the opportunity to prepare for a full life in the professions and occupations that require intellectual flexibility, broad knowledge, and a basic comprehension of human beings and their challenges.

The college is comprised of ten departments or schools: Communication, English, History, Integrative Humanities and Social Sciences, Philosophy and Religious Studies, Psychology, School of Public and International Affairs, School of Social Work, Sociology and Anthropology, and World Languages and Cultures.

Cross-College Programs

Alexander Hamilton Scholars Program

The Alexander Hamilton Scholars Program permits students with a strong global orientation to simultaneously pursue two majors from the College of Humanities and Social Sciences and the Poole College of Management. Students may earn either a B.A. in International Studies, History, Anthropology, World Languages and Cultures, or Political Science (International Politics concentration); and earn either a B.S. in Accounting, a B.S. in Business Management, or a B.S or B.A. in Economics.

Key elements of the Alexander Hamilton Program include world language study to at least the 300-level, a Management capstone course (economics seminar or business policy and strategy), an Introduction to International Studies (IS 200) class, and each Hamilton scholar is required to complete at least six credit hours in a study abroad program.

Hamilton scholars participate in special programs throughout their enrollment that are designed to increase their exposure to leading-edge management practices, international businesses, and world cultures. These programs will include activities such as special lectures and networking events with international corporate partners, field trips to international companies with a local presence, charity fund-raising and community service projects, mentoring of foreign business students, and Scholars banquets.

Benjamin Franklin Scholars Program

The Benjamin Franklin Scholars program, sponsored jointly by the College of Engineering and the College of Humanities and Social Sciences, allows a select group of highly motivated students to simultaneously pursue bachelor's degrees in both engineering and humanities or social sciences, producing students with a broad training uniquely equipping them for the challenges of today's world. Students in this program can combine any major in the College of Humanities and Social Sciences (plus economics) with any major in the College of Engineering. This program, now entering its thirty-sixth year, has produced individuals who use their engineering training in a broad range of settings and jobs: in industry, in academia, in government, working as engineers, lawyers, physicians, and policy analysts, among others.

There are three entry points into the program. A limited number of newly admitted first-year students are invited to apply to join the program in the April of their senior year of high school, based on academic performance or demonstrated interests in humanities. During New Student Orientation the summer before the first year, all new entering first-year students in the College of Engineering are invited to attend an information session about the program and apply to join. Thereafter interested students can seek admission through an individual consultation with the director.

The program has dedicated scholarship money associated with it, and students who have completed the Franklin intro course, have CODA'd into their Engineering and Humanities and Social Sciences majors and who have a 3.0 or above GPA are generally eligible for scholarship support. The time required to complete both degrees depends on a variety of factors, including incoming AP credit, semester course load, use of summer school, and Humanities and Social Sciences degree sought. The program can be completed in 4-5 years, with five years being typical.

The student-led section of the program, the Franklin Council, arranges a wide variety of social, service, and academic events throughout the year.

Thomas Jefferson Scholars Program

The Thomas Jefferson Scholars Program is a joint program of the College of Agriculture and Life Sciences and the College of Humanities and Social Sciences. Participants earn two bachelor's degrees: one concentrating in an area of agriculture or life science and one in an area of humanities or social science. Students can choose any major in each college, to meet individual interests and career goals. The purpose of the program is to produce potential leaders in agriculture or the life sciences who have technical expertise integrated with an understanding of the social, political, and cultural issues that affect decision-making. The program includes special classes and guest lecturers for Jefferson Scholars, travel and other enrichment experiences, and a variety of social and service activities.

Once a student applying for admission to NC State has been accepted, the Program invites students of high achievement to apply for the Jefferson Scholars. Applicants come for an interview in March, and a small number of entering students are selected to participate in the Jefferson Scholars Program. Successful participants receive scholarship support after the sophomore year.

Honors Program

Each department in the college offers an honors program designed to encourage outstanding students to develop their intellectual potential to the fullest extent possible through individualized study, special seminars, and close association with faculty members in their major field.

Scholarships

In addition to the university-wide awards available, the College of Humanities and Social Sciences offers a limited number of merit and need-based scholarships.
